virginia tech - where watershed management activities need to focus to most effectively achieve watershed management goals and utilize limited resources most effectively. models can also be used to assess risks and provide information to stakeholders about the benefits and consequences of not achieving selected watershed management goals. a previous asabe 1. watershed management concept and principles - icrisat - watershed size also depend on the objectives of the development and terrain slope. a large watershed can be managed in plain valley areas or where forest or pasture development is the main objective. in hilly areas or where intensive agriculture development is planned, the size of watershed relatively preferred is small. modern farming tools & techniques - mtand - 1. describe at least one modern farming tool or technique and how it is used to increase efficiency and reduce environmental impact. 2. identify the main differences and similarities of current farming practices. 3. communicate 2-3 facts and recommend 2-3 credible resources about innovative farming tools and techniques to colleagues and the public. regionalization methods for watershed management ... - pedon scale to watershed or regional scale (renschler, 2000). modern watershed models focus on the prediction of water fluxes for certain space and time scales. however, when the problem of interest is not at the scale of the model, there are difficulties in scaling both data and model results (also see renschler et al., 1999). deep watershed transform for instance segmentation - which combines the strengths of modern deep neural networks with the power of the watershed transform. our model is simple, fast, accurate, and inherently handles an arbitrary number of instances per image with ease. 3. a review on the watershed transform we start our discussion with a review of the watershed ovveerrviiieeww ooff wwaatteerrshheedd mmoonniittoorriinngg - pollution in a watershed and evaluate the likelihood of adverse effects. monitoring information can also be used to select the best remediation techniques, to prioritize efforts, and to track remedial actions before, during and after their execution (figures 9 and 10). assessing program goals and effectiveness anacostia watershed implementation plan -
